My dear Fisher:

There was one point I forgot to ask you to-day. Max Nicholson was rather anxious to know whether you did ever get any further with the egg variability problem which Jourdain gave you data on and he gave you some advice about ? It seems such a pity not to make the best use of these elaborate calculations.

I will bear in mind your suggestions about Gross, and would like a long talk about the whole problem when we meet again. By then I shall have some sort of draft to chew on.

Ever yours,

Julian Huxley
