Dear Huxley,

Many thanks for your letter which I found on my return here.

I could come up to town any time now I am back, and should be very glad to go into your research worker's problem. It might save time though if he or she sent me the actual data or some of it in advance.

I should be glad too, to talk over the pamphlet with you. I gather that the reprinting has been delayed, though I do not know if this will give time to get at the facts as to Studin's data. I could come any day but Thursday next week.

I doubt if any stronger candidate than Blacker will put in, but I do not feel personally that he is the ideal secretary. Our particular staff seem to need someone right among them all the time to keep them from wasting each other's time, I believe only a whole time man could give all the thought that is needed to make our work very good.

Fix a day for me to come up for an afternoon, not Thursday this week.

Yours sincerely,
