

faculties which might confront them in the future. Let them do all in their power to lubricate this complicated and delicate machinery of Empire organisation. Let them not clog the wheels of progress with narrow and selfish views, but let sentiment, a wide outlook, and great traditions be their lubricants. Then, though the machinery might creak at times, he felt sure they would reach their destination in safety.