

CHAMBER MUSIC RECITAL

Conservatorium String Quartet

By H. BREWSTER JONES

The third recital of the afternoon chamber music series presented by the Elder Conservatorium String Quartet...

The D Major Quartet of Dittersdorf, which opened the programme, is accompanied by a moderate tempo.

There were delightful contrasts in the "finale, Allegro," with its fascinating quality of rhythm.

The outstanding difference between the Beethoven and the Dittersdorf was the delicate touch of soloistic importance in the first violin part.

tempted to take a period between the final triumph of democracy and the fall under Julius Caesar.

Professor Fitz Herbert said that the life of Rome was based in the first place on the family; and he went on to give a detailed account of family life in the various classes.

"DEAR OLD GENERAL KNOWLEDGE"

Vital Problems For The Schools

INTELLECT AND THE EMOTIONS

The Vice-Principal of the Adelaide Public School, in the stimulating article that follows, discusses some debatable points recently raised by the Headmaster of St. Peter's College.

It may be rash for one who is unacquainted with the full text, to comment on the Rev. Guy Pentreath's recent address on "Some Principles in Education."

The British Empire, he says, is rapidly becoming aware of its failure to educate, the prime cause of the failure apparently being the domination of school curricula by the University.

Mr. Pentreath suggests that training in such things as art, craft, and music would be more suitable for many.

much as an emotional training, and morally. Perhaps the chief failing in the present curriculum is that it fails to introduce a wider range of interests.

In answer to this, it might be urged that the universal taste for light literature and drama, which, with much leisure time is spent by people of every class and age, points to an obvious need.

There is a range of transient and shallow interests come instinctively; and there will be general sympathy with Mr. Pentreath's views only in so far as they are a plea for the emotional rather than a widening of these interests.

What Is General Knowledge?

The ordinary man's conception of a sound general education is generally thought of just those things that he knows himself.

The Vital Question

Whether or not we are concentrating on those subjects that serve best to lay the foundations of the future life, is the vital question.

deal, after to pension off dear old General Knowledge. Esprit de corps, the motto of our framers might be superannuated on his "360 marks."

ALLEGED THEFT OF OVERCOAT

Month's Vigil By Police

Following the disappearance over a period of a number of students' overcoats from the Adelaide University, young policemen from the police station have been watching during the evenings for about a month coats hanging in corridors.

At the city watchhouse, Leslie Martin, 27, of Norwood, was charged with the last of an overcoat. Mr. Pentreath will probably appear in the Adelaide Police Court today.
