the interruption of the course of study of those students who have already fulfilled one, two, or more years of the prescribed course. This, however, under present circumstances appears to be inevitable, unless the medical men, who are poorly enough paid as it is, are willing to submit to a material reduction of their emoluments. The alternative to this is for the Ministry to find means, for restoring the grant of £600, and for the credit's sake of South Australia it is sincerely to be hoped that it will lose no time in doing so.
