THIS FITNESS

Physical fitness seems to be the issue, (in the title on page 3).

Avoiding responsibility is extremely close. It's true that popular thought about the cause of the present situation is fairly widespread and may sound counter-intuitive. But the problem is not just with the individual himself, but with the institutions that have shaped him.

It's the fault of the politicians, as true (in the title on page 2). Avoiding

There may be various reasons for not taking responsibility, but the key one seems to be a lack of transparency in the political system.

ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF THE THEATRE GUILD

Unembarrassed by a weighty resolution turning the Theatre Guild into the New England Symphony Orchestra, the annual meeting of the Guild was held on Thursday evening at the New England Electric Station, with the object of organizing a new society to which the members of the Theatre Guild might be invited. The meeting was called to order by President Frank Sholes, who read a letter from Mr. J. H. McLaughlin, announcing that he had been appointed Secretary-Treasurer of the new society. The secretary was unanimously elected, and the following officers were also elected:

President, Frank Sholes;

Vice-President, William H. Emerson;

Secretary-Treasurer, J. H. McLaughlin;

Representative—S. J. C. Smith.

The meeting was then opened by the reading of a resolution adopted by the Executive Committee, to the effect that the members of the Theatre Guild would be invited to join the New England Symphony Orchestra. The resolution was adopted unanimously.

STARK

What is going to happen after this war? It is always water under the bridge. Indeed, it is in our own interests and the country's interest to know the answer to this question. The country is pouring our money into the war effort, and the safety and future of the world depends on an accurate answer. Who is going to win the war? Who will be the leader of the world? What will be the future of the world? The answer to these questions will determine the course of history.
CORRESPONDENCE

THE ADOLESCENT SOCIALITE SPEAKS AGAIN

Sir—My article "adolescent Socialite" in last week's issue met with such a deluge of protest letters from several people that I felt it necessary to write this article in the hope of clearing up any misunderstanding. The aim of my article was to analyze the behavior of young people in social situations and to question the validity of some of the traditional roles and expectations placed upon them. I do not believe that my article was intended to be offensive or disrespectful, but it may have been interpreted as such by some readers. I apologize for any offense caused and I hope to address these concerns in the future.

The ADOLESCENT

INTELLECTUAL HONESTY

The Editor, On Dit.

Sir.—In recent months, there has been a growing recognition of the importance of intellectual honesty in academic and scholarly circles. This is particularly relevant in the field of science, where the dissemination of accurate and reliable information is essential. I believe that it is crucial for those who engage in intellectual pursuits to uphold the highest standards of integrity and to be transparent in their work. Any deviation from these principles can have serious consequences for the credibility of the entire field.

SLEEPING PROFS.

The Editor, On Dit.

Sir.—I am writing to correct a recent statement made in your column regarding the hours of work for professors. It is important to note that many professors dedicate substantial time to research, teaching, and administrative duties, which often extend well beyond the regular academic hours. It is crucial for students to have a realistic understanding of the expectations placed upon them.

SPEED DEMONS

To the Editor, On Dit.

Sir.—I would like to express concerns about the increasing prevalence of speed demons in the city. The reckless behavior of these individuals poses a significant risk to both the drivers and pedestrians on the road. It is imperative that measures be taken to address this issue and promote a safer environment for everyone.
