The ANGAS WILL.

PARTICULARS OF THE BEQUESTS.

ESTATE WORTH £8000,000.

The will of the late Mr. John Howard Angas, has been proved for probate by Mr. Mackay C. Gordon, Q.C., Registrar General, who, with Mr. M. G. L. Chaffey, Esquire, solicitor, who appeared joint solicitors to the estate by the testator. The estate is valued at £8000,000, which is a matter of some interest, but the provisions may be summarised as follows:

Executors and Trustees.

As already notified, Mrs. Angas, Mr. Charles Angas, Esquire, Mr. Arthur Angas, Esquire, and Mr. Leonard W. Angas, have been appointed as executors and trustees.

Personal Legacies.

Various specific legacies are bequeathed to Mrs. Angas, the testator's children, grandchildren, nephews, nieces, and to several personal friends and employees.

Miscellaneous Bequests.

The following are the bequests to charities:

- To the Governor, £1000.
- To St. Margaret's Convenient Hospital, Scapa, £1000.
- To the South Australian Institution for the Blind and Aged and Ailing, £1000.
- To the Adelaide Benevolent and Stranger's Friendly Society, Incorpo,
- To the South Australian Institution for the Blind and Aged and Ailing, £1000.
- To the British and Foreign Bible Society, £1000.
- To the Royal South Australian Society for the Conducted Blind, £1000.
- To the Royal Adelaide Hospital, £1000.
- To the Adelaide City Mission, £1000.
- To the Royal Adelaide Mystery, £1000.
- To Congregational Union and Home Missionary Society, £1000.
- To the Congregational Ministers' Provident Fund, to be divided between the said funds, £500.

Rural and Agricultural.

To the Royal Agricultural and Horticultural Society of South Australia, £500, to be divided between the said funds, £500.

Education.

For the purpose of providing a scholarship at the University of Adelaide, or elsewhere, £1000.

To the University of Adelaide, £1000.

University Extension Lectures.

University Extension lectures now form an integral part of the educational system of South Australia, and the popular demand that they should be continued is a hopeful augury for the future. Diverse famous speakers who have "little learning is a dangerous thing" still hold good in certain conditions, but his instruction to his hearers to "deepen or taste the mirth of the Pierian spring" does not overstate the case.  A man of real culture is doubtless necessary to judge the intrinsic and extrinsic value of a subject, and superficial knowledge is rigorously regarded as a reproach in scholastic circles, and rightly so. The State, therefore, when found in the ranks of the learned, is always a matter for congratulation. But they are in every civilised country employed to increase and develop the capabilities of the nation, and to process the intellectual qualifications of a fair body of people who are prevented by the exigencies of circumstances from devoting to the pursuit of culture more or less than they would choose to do in a better life. After they have embarked upon commercial careers or entered in life, they may not have the same opportunities for further education, but their having started well is eminently desirable, and it is on this account that the University Extension Lectures are an immense boon. The amount of actual returns from the University has been considerable, and the returns for the last year are a very gratifying indication of the success of the arrangement. A number of the students have sent in reports of the lectures they attended, and these have been very satisfactory. The lectures have been delivered by well-known scholars and educators, and the quality of the instruction is generally high. The University Extension Lectures are a valuable addition to the educational system, and the future prospects are very promising.