UNIVERSITY STATUTORY

STATUE OF SIR WALTER HUGHES.

At a special convocation of the University on Wednesday morning, the Chancellor, Sir Walter Hughes, M.P., announced that he had received a letter from the Hon. Mr. C. J. Ryan, P.C., M.P., that he had a petition bearing the signatures of twenty-two hundred citizens of Sydney, calling for the establishment of a statue of the late Sir Walter Hughes, M.P., in the University of Sydney, to commemorate the services rendered by him to Australia, and that the total sum of £20,000 or more had been promised to the University of Sydney by the late Sir Walter Hughes, M.P., to be used for the purpose of building such a monument. The Chancellor said that he had seen it as a most fitting mark of respect to the memory of a man who had so nobly served his country and that the University was not only entitled to commemorate the services rendered by him to Australia, but that it was also his duty to do so. The Chancellor said that the University was not only entitled to commemorate the services rendered by him to Australia, but that it was also his duty to do so.

The Chancellor said that the University was not only entitled to commemorate the services rendered by him to Australia, but that it was also his duty to do so. The Chancellor said that the University was not only entitled to commemorate the services rendered by him to Australia, but that it was also his duty to do so.

A DREAMED CAREER

The late Sir Walter Hughes Hughes was one of those疏通spirited and energetic men who had been for many years one of the leading members of the University of Sydney. He was one of the men who had helped to build up the University of Sydney, and he was one of the men who had helped to build up the University of Sydney.

For years Mr. Hughes was a great support of the University, and he was one of the men who had helped to build up the University of Sydney. He was one of the men who had helped to build up the University of Sydney.

The University was entitled to commemorate the services rendered by him to Australia, and that the late Sir Walter Hughes, M.P., was one of those men who had helped to build up the University of Sydney. He was one of the men who had helped to build up the University of Sydney.

The Chancellor said that the University was entitled to commemorate the services rendered by him to Australia, and that the late Sir Walter Hughes, M.P., was one of those men who had helped to build up the University of Sydney. He was one of the men who had helped to build up the University of Sydney.

A MEMORIAL ACCOUNT

There are many public memorials of the late Sir Walter Hughes Hughes, M.P., in South Australia, and particularly in Adelaide, where he was a member of the South Australian Legislative Council, and where he was a member of the South Australian Legislative Council.

The University was entitled to commemorate the services rendered by him to Australia, and that the late Sir Walter Hughes, M.P., was one of those men who had helped to build up the University of Sydney. He was one of the men who had helped to build up the University of Sydney.

The University was entitled to commemorate the services rendered by him to Australia, and that the late Sir Walter Hughes, M.P., was one of those men who had helped to build up the University of Sydney. He was one of the men who had helped to build up the University of Sydney.

The Chancellor said that the University was entitled to commemorate the services rendered by him to Australia, and that the late Sir Walter Hughes, M.P., was one of those men who had helped to build up the University of Sydney. He was one of the men who had helped to build up the University of Sydney.

A MEMORIAL ACCOUNT

There are many public memorials of the late Sir Walter Hughes Hughes, M.P., in South Australia, and particularly in Adelaide, where he was a member of the South Australian Legislative Council, and where he was a member of the South Australian Legislative Council.

The University was entitled to commemorate the services rendered by him to Australia, and that the late Sir Walter Hughes, M.P., was one of those men who had helped to build up the University of Sydney. He was one of the men who had helped to build up the University of Sydney.

The University was entitled to commemorate the services rendered by him to Australia, and that the late Sir Walter Hughes, M.P., was one of those men who had helped to build up the University of Sydney. He was one of the men who had helped to build up the University of Sydney.

The Chancellor said that the University was entitled to commemorate the services rendered by him to Australia, and that the late Sir Walter Hughes, M.P., was one of those men who had helped to build up the University of Sydney. He was one of the men who had helped to build up the University of Sydney.

RETURN TO NATURE

While addressing the public school students of the city of Sydney, the Minister of Education, Sir Walter Hughes, M.P., said that it was a great pleasure to see the community realizing the importance of nature and of the benefits that can be derived from a return to nature. He said that the community was becoming more aware of the importance of nature and of the benefits that can be derived from a return to nature.

Sir Walter Hughes, M.P., said that the community was becoming more aware of the importance of nature and of the benefits that can be derived from a return to nature.

The Minister of Education, Sir Walter Hughes, M.P., said that it was a great pleasure to see the community realizing the importance of nature and of the benefits that can be derived from a return to nature. He said that the community was becoming more aware of the importance of nature and of the benefits that can be derived from a return to nature.

Sir Walter Hughes, M.P., said that the community was becoming more aware of the importance of nature and of the benefits that can be derived from a return to nature.