LEADERS OF THE MIDDLE AGES

RICHARD I

At the University on Tuesday evening came to an end the annual meeting of the Leaders of the middle ages. The closing ceremony took place there. Sir Walter Scott had long been associated with the work of the society, and his death last year left a great gap in the ranks of its supporters. The meeting was addressed by the President, Sir John Smith, who paid tribute to the memory of Sir Walter Scott. He pointed out that his work had done much to bring the Middle Ages to the attention of the public, and that his influence had been felt in many quarters. The meeting was attended by many of the leading members of the society, and was a very successful one.
