A GREAT BROTHERHOOD

The opening address at the Teachers' Conference on Monday June 3rd was delivered by Mr. Burton, the President. He said: "We have gathered together to discuss the problems of education, but we are enchanted by the opportunity of meeting for the purpose. It is a great thing for a country to have a broad and liberal system of education. Teachers have always been the most important members of our community. They are the guardians of our youth. By their wisdom and skill they are shaping our future. It is a great thing for a country to have teachers with the broadest possible outlook on life." He concluded by wishing the conference every success.

A Grand Legacy

We have reached an interesting stage in the education of our children. The older generation is giving way to the younger. Our schools are being reorganized, and the children of the future are in the process of being educated. The standards of education are being raised, and there is every reason to believe that our children will be better prepared than we are. The old system of education has been criticized, and there is a growing awareness of the need for change. The challenges of the future require a new approach to education. We must be prepared to meet them.

The President, Mr. E. B. Burton, said: "We have gathered here to discuss the problems of education, but we are enchanted by the opportunity of meeting for the purpose. It is a great thing for a country to have a broad and liberal system of education. Teachers have always been the most important members of our community. They are the guardians of our youth. By their wisdom and skill they are shaping our future. It is a great thing for a country to have teachers with the broadest possible outlook on life." He concluded by wishing the conference every success.