SYDNEY UNIVERSITY JUBILEE

The following is a translation of the Latin address given by Dr. Sir John Hope, President of the University, on the occasion of the jubilee celebration of the University of Sydney, on the 2nd October 1902.

The University of Sydney was founded on the 3rd October 1850, and has since that date continued to enlarge its sphere of influence and activity. Its growth has been rapid and steady, and the University is now one of the leading educational institutions of the Commonwealth of Australia. It is well equipped with modern buildings and apparatus, and its faculty is of the highest order. The University has produced many distinguished men, who have done much for the advancement of knowledge and the welfare of the community.

The address was delivered in the presence of the Governor-General of the Commonwealth, the Premier of New South Wales, and other distinguished guests.

The address was received with universal applause and was followed by a choral address, sung by the students of the University.

The occasion was a great one, and the University was well represented by students and graduates from all parts of the Commonwealth.

The University has always been a great centre of learning, and has played an important part in the development of the Commonwealth. It is a symbol of the progress and prosperity of the country, and of the ideals which it seeks to promote.

The University has always been a great centre of learning, and has played an important part in the development of the Commonwealth. It is a symbol of the progress and prosperity of the country, and of the ideals which it seeks to promote.