The University of Adelaide was established in 1874. One of its earliest benefactions was the bequest of Thomas Elder, who gave a further sum of £10,000, and bequeathed it to £4,000,000. Sir Walter Watson Hughes also donated £30,000 towards the founding of the institution. A statue is erected in the memory of Sir Thomas Elder, and one of Sir Walter Watson Hughes, in the grounds of the main entrance, to the east of the city. The senate is composed of all graduates of the degree of master or doctor, and of all other graduates of those years standing, besides graduates of other universities.

The number of professors, lecturers, and teachers was 233, and at present numbers 350, while the university has increased from six to 240, integrating various branches of learning and producing men and women of various branches of science, art, science, law, medicine, and music, and of various branches of learning and producing men and women of various branches of science, art, science, law, medicine, and music.

The university's main entrance, the Elder Conservatorium, is the hub of the city. The conservatorium is the heart of the university, and the location of the main entrance, to the east of the city. The senate is composed of all graduates of the degree of master or doctor, and of all other graduates of those years standing, besides graduates of other universities.

The number of professors, lecturers, and teachers was 233, and at present numbers 350, while the university has increased from six to 240, integrating various branches of learning and producing men and women of various branches of science, art, science, law, medicine, and music.

The university's main entrance, the Elder Conservatorium, is the hub of the city. The conservatorium is the heart of the university, and the location of the main entrance, to the east of the city. The senate is composed of all graduates of the degree of master or doctor, and of all other graduates of those years standing, besides graduates of other universities.

The number of professors, lecturers, and teachers was 233, and at present numbers 350, while the university has increased from six to 240, integrating various branches of learning and producing men and women of various branches of science, art, science, law, medicine, and music.

The university's main entrance, the Elder Conservatorium, is the hub of the city. The conservatorium is the heart of the university, and the location of the main entrance, to the east of the city. The senate is composed of all graduates of the degree of master or doctor, and of all other graduates of those years standing, besides graduates of other universities.

The number of professors, lecturers, and teachers was 233, and at present numbers 350, while the university has increased from six to 240, integrating various branches of learning and producing men and women of various branches of science, art, science, law, medicine, and music.