BROWNING'S IDEALISM.

LECTURE BY PROFESSOR HENRY.

On Tuesday evening the last of the series of three University enterior lectures on "The Evolution of the English Drama" was delivered in the Elder Hall, before a full audience. Professor Browning took his place among the lecturers of the Adelaide University, the theme being "Browning's Philosophy of Life."

Professor Browning remarked that "in Browning's philosophy it was a risk in constructing a philosophy at all when we have a poet of Browning's eloquence and dramatic poety. But Browning had imbued himself with the spirit of his own philosophy. He had written Plutarch's Morals and Paradise Lost. There it comes to take away my resolution."
