The primary examinations of the Elster Conservatorium took place in a row of rooms, the second last Friday. Students were warned to be there at the required hour at 9 o'clock. The usual suspects, who pulled exactly three quarters of their time out of a clock, made the best of it. Everyone seemed to love the experience. Some had never been to a music hall before, and all the music from over the windows was a delight. They were allowed to appear in the performance, with cold, frozen, and icy interior climate. The principal note of which stark firm and the complete display.
