The Register 14th Nov. 1878

LAW REFORM BILL

In Committee.

Mr. ACHERBINALD, in moving the adjournment, said that when he was introduced under a promise that the House would rise at 1 o'clock, he had every reason to believe that the course of business would be to give the members of the community a day of leisure, not to continue the House, as at that hour, the business of the country was to be completed. He had no reason to believe that any other reason existed for that change, except that such was the case, and he wished, therefore, to address the House on the subject. The House was divided into two sections, one of which was in South Australia, and the other in South Australia. An adultery conviction was then read out of the House, and the Adelaide press was already in existence, and was most industriously in their work. Mr. ACHERBINALD stated that he was sorry to hear that the House was to be divided into two sections, as he had every reason to believe that the House was to give the members of the community a day of leisure, not to continue the House, as at that hour, the business of the country was to be completed.

Mr. GIBBONS said that the House was divided into two sections, one of which was in South Australia, and the other in South Australia. An adultery conviction was then read out of the House, and the Adelaide press was already in existence, and was most industriously in their work. Mr. ACHERBINALD stated that he was sorry to hear that the House was to be divided into two sections, as he had every reason to believe that the House was to give the members of the community a day of leisure, not to continue the House, as at that hour, the business of the country was to be completed.

Mr. GIBBONS said that the House was divided into two sections, one of which was in South Australia, and the other in South Australia. An adultery conviction was then read out of the House, and the Adelaide press was already in existence, and was most industriously in their work. Mr. ACHERBINALD stated that he was sorry to hear that the House was to be divided into two sections, as he had every reason to believe that the House was to give the members of the community a day of leisure, not to continue the House, as at that hour, the business of the country was to be completed.