The Government is exercising its mind about how to deal with the growing demand for a greater number of public institutions on the site of the former Adelaide Barracks. One of the most prominent proposals is the establishment of a new institution on the North Terrace. The space is ample, and the Government recognises the advantages of having such a building, as it can provide secure and attractive building for any purpose that the community may desire. The Government is also considering the possibility of providing additional accommodation for the University, which is now overcrowded.

SCHOOL PROBLEM.

School Commission's Enquiries.

Evidence by a Head Master.

A meeting of the royal commission appointed to inquire into the conditions of education in the South Australian schools was held recently. There were present Mr. Ryan (Chairman), Mr. J. F. Findlay, Mr. T. Green, M.P., and Mr. E. H. Green, Head Master of the Goodwood School, and President of the Teachers' Association. The evidence was given by Mr. E. H. Green, who stated that the schools were overcrowded, and that the conditions were not conducive to the proper education of the children. The Government had promised to provide additional schools, but the delay in the construction of these schools had caused considerable inconvenience to the students and teachers. The Government was asked to take immediate steps to remedy the situation.
