THE CENTRAL LABORATORY SCHEME.

A SUPPLEMENTARY EXPLANATION.

The scheme for the centralization of the pathological and bacteriological laboratories of the Adelaide Hospital and various Government departments, and also of municipal and educational authorities, has been under review for some time. The direction of the Board of Management of the hospital has been favorably received on the grounds that such a scheme would be economical and would place the laboratory under the control of individual departments. It has been decided that the idea is to concentrate the work in one up-to-date laboratory staffed by a number of trained and skilled officers, thus rendering it unnecessary to have the small "laboratories" for pathological and bacteriological work in various departments. The chief bacteriologist of the Adelaide Hospital, Dr. T. E. BRUCE, is to be appointed as director of the central laboratory, and the Board will call upon the Government to provide the necessary financial assistance.

Promised the Board to take action on the idea of extending the laboratory work, it was added.

I don't think there is much to add to the statement which has already been published, but you think that you can say if you like that the experience of the department has demonstrated that the bacteriological and pathological laboratory could be extended with great advantage to the public. The centralization of such laboratories, it is said, would be of great advantage to the public at large. To this end, the Board has been urged to extend the work of the department.

The CHIEF SECRETARY moved the following new clause (B) in the Act: "The Labor
