In a letter congratulating Sir Charles Todd, the Rt. Hon. Sir William Milner—who was Chief Secretary when the new Meteorological service in 1850 was established—paid the following graceful tribute to the great and distinguished meteorologist.

"I have a special knowledge of the ability and zeal which you have shown in the development of the Meteorological Service that has been constructed, inasmuch as at that time I was seconded to you to get a knowledge of the department, and, as far as I can recollect, you succeeded in accomplishing your object, and have succeeded in getting the work done, and you have given your services to get the necessary endowment. It is a very satisfactory result, and I have every confidence that the service will be carried on.

"You have a special knowledge of the ability and zeal which you have shown in the development of the Meteorological Service that has been constructed, inasmuch as at that time I was seconded to you to get a knowledge of the department, and, as far as I can recollect, you succeeded in accomplishing your object, and have succeeded in getting the work done, and you have given your services to get the necessary endowment. It is a very satisfactory result, and I have every confidence that the service will be carried on.

Sir Charles Todd, who was then at Central Mount Stuart, sitting on the ground on a very hot day, attended the meeting, and was present at the ceremony, and was the last to be seen leaving the room, and the moment he was seen, the crowd of people who had assembled around him, and who had followed him, left the room, and the moment he was seen, the crowd of people who had assembled around him, and who had followed him, left the room, and the moment he was seen, the crowd of people who had assembled around him, and who had followed him, left the room, and the moment he was seen, the crowd of people who had assembled around him, and who had followed him, left the room, and the moment he was seen, the crowd of people who had assembled around him, and who had followed him, left the room, and the moment he was seen, the crowd of people who had assembled around him, and who had followed him, left the room, and the moment he was seen, the crowd of people who had assembled around him, and who had followed him, left the room, and the moment he was seen, the crowd of people who had assembled around him, and who had followed him, left the room, and the moment he was seen, the crowd of people who had assembled around him, and who had followed him, left the room, and the moment he was seen, the crowd of people who had assembled around him, and who had followed him, left the room, and the moment he was seen, the crowd of people who had assembled around him, and who had followed him, left the room, and the moment he was seen, the crowd of people who had assembled around him, and who had followed him, left the room, and the moment he was seen, the crowd of people who had assembled around him, and who had followed him, left the room, and the moment he was seen, the crowd of people who had assembled around him, and who had followed him, left the room, and the moment he was seen, the crowd of people who had assembled around him, and who had followed him, left the room, and the moment he was seen, the crowd of people who had assembled around him, and who had followed him, left the room, and the moment he was seen, the crowd of people who had assembled around him, and who had followed him, left the room, and the moment he was seen, the crow