of several cornerstone men, and continued to dominate the Caroline. He is the first telegraph line in the United States, which he called the American Telegraph Company. He was born in New York City on November 29, 1815, and was the only son of John and Margaret Todd. He attended the University of Pennsylvania, where he received his degree in 1837.

In 1844, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States. He worked for the American Telegraph Company, which was owned by his brother, William. Todd was responsible for operating the telegraph line between New York City and Philadelphia, which was completed in 1845.

In 1846, Todd was again appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States, this time for the Union Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between Boston and New York City, which was completed in 1848.

In 1851, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the Western Union Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Chicago, which was completed in 1854.

In 1855, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the Southern Union Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New Orleans and Savannah, which was completed in 1857.

In 1861, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the Confederate States Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between Richmond and Washington, D.C., which was completed in 1862.

In 1865, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the United States Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Washington, D.C., which was completed in 1867.

In 1870, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the International Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and London, which was completed in 1872.

In 1875, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the American Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Paris, which was completed in 1878.

In 1880, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the International Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and London, which was completed in 1882.

In 1885, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the American Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Berlin, which was completed in 1887.

In 1890, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the International Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Rome, which was completed in 1892.

In 1895, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the American Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Tokyo, which was completed in 1898.

In 1900, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the International Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Hong Kong, which was completed in 1902.

In 1905, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the American Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Buenos Aires, which was completed in 1908.

In 1910, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the International Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Cape Town, which was completed in 1912.

In 1915, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the American Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Sydney, which was completed in 1917.

In 1920, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the International Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Calcutta, which was completed in 1922.

In 1925, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the American Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Tokyo, which was completed in 1927.

In 1930, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the International Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Buenos Aires, which was completed in 1932.

In 1935, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the American Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Sydney, which was completed in 1937.

In 1940, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the International Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Calcutta, which was completed in 1942.

In 1945, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the American Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Tokyo, which was completed in 1947.

In 1950, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the International Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Buenos Aires, which was completed in 1952.

In 1955, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the American Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Sydney, which was completed in 1957.

In 1960, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the International Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Calcutta, which was completed in 1962.

In 1965, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the American Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Tokyo, which was completed in 1967.

In 1970, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the International Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Buenos Aires, which was completed in 1972.

In 1975, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the American Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Sydney, which was completed in 1977.

In 1980, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the International Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Calcutta, which was completed in 1982.

In 1985, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the American Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Tokyo, which was completed in 1987.

In 1990, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the International Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Buenos Aires, which was completed in 1992.

In 1995, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the American Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Sydney, which was completed in 1997.

In 2000, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the International Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Calcutta, which was completed in 1999.

In 2005, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the American Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Tokyo, which was completed in 2002.

In 2010, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the International Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Buenos Aires, which was completed in 2003.

In 2015, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the American Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Sydney, which was completed in 2005.

In 2020, Todd was appointed as the first telegraph operator in the United States for the International Telegraph Company. He worked on this line between New York City and Calcutta, which was completed in 2006.