THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

At the meeting of the Executive Council on Wednesday the Lieutenant-Governor approved of a new schedule in the education regulations relating to the agreement to be made between pupil teachers, their parents or guardians (styled the guarantors), and the Minister of Education, on the subject of the training of the teachers for their profession. The term of the engagement is for the cumulative periods of five years and three years. During the five years the pupil teacher undertakes, in such manner as the Minister requires, to qualify for the profession of a teacher or teaching, but it is provided that he or she shall not be obliged to be so engaged for more than six hours upon any one day or for more than 30 hours in one week. During the first three years an allowance is made to the pupil teacher, while in the fourth and fifth a salary is paid, and in addition £20 yearly may be paid for maintenance under certain conditions. For the first three years special instruction is to be provided at the High School, and during the fourth and fifth years at the school or schools to which the pupil teacher shall be appointed. If at the expiration of five years the teacher shall desire to enter the Training College he or she shall be permitted to do so on producing a certificate of good health and entering into a further agreement, provided that scholarship and teaching ability are approved. The pupil teacher and the guarantor agree that at the expiration of the first five years the pupil teacher will serve as acting assistant or provisional school teacher as desired for three years at the remuneration provided in the regulations. If in the first five years the teacher desires to cancel the agreement for any reason other than lasting disease or accident, or if he or she shall be required to leave the service for some fault, he or she shall repay all money paid under the agreement during the first three years, but certain deductions are arranged for if the cancellation takes place in the fourth or fifth year. If the agreement is broken during the second period of three years the teacher is to forfeit, in addition to salary, £1 for every month or part of a month of the unexpired balance of the term of three years. The concluding paragraphs of the agreement set forth that the pupil teacher enters into the agreement voluntarily and with the consent of the guarantor and that the guarantor "will clothe, feed, lodge, and watch over the pupil teacher during the continuance of this agreement in a manner befitting the position and status of the pupil teacher."

Labour
Trouble

Register March 1st 1909

—South Australian Government
Criticised.—

Mr. J. Taylor, speaking at last night's mass meeting, said there was an industrial dispute at Renmark, and the men on strike there were being fed by the A.W.U. They had had 16 police sent to Renmark, and there were 12 men sworn in as special constables, so that they could see the South Australian Government was not what it ought to be. A procession was held at Renmark on February 5, and one of the strikers was shot and the police were sent to the place. The South Australian Labour Party had certainly passed a resolution censuring the Commissioner of Police, but still the speaker failed to see how the South Australian Government could be classed as any better than the Wade Government. These police were sent to Renmark to help those who went to work for lower wages. The men were getting only 6/6 a day there, although the place was more expensive to live in than Mildura. There were scabs in Renmark. There were men there from the Adelaide University and from the colleges fruitpicking, and even men from Broken Hill were there. He advised them to find out who these men were. They were going by other names at Renmark. They would get a list of some of these men and post up their names at the Trades Hall. He did not think it was fair for these men to go from Broken Hill and "scab" at Renmark. They might as well do so in Broken Hill.

ADELAIDE SCHOOL OF MINES.

LIKENED TO A "SCAB"
ESTABLISHMENT.

BROKEN HILL, March 1.

At the monthly meeting of the A.W.U. the secretary was instructed to write to Mr. Price (Premier of South Australia) protesting against the system of sending out School of Mines students as general shed hands at shearing time to do the work of members of the union, on the pretence of learning wool classing. This practice had become so common that at some sheds, it was stated, more than half the hands employed consisted of "Jackaroos," who were a continual source of trouble. They refused to become members of the union, while they were doing the work of ordinary shed hands. The A.W.U. members claim that a Labour Government should not allow a technical college to develop into a "scab" establishment.

The unionist v. non-unionist trouble has not advanced any further. The combined unions are not taking an open part in the dispute, but a meeting of the Central Mine men has been called for Sunday, to discuss the situation. The trouble, however, is not confined to the Central Mine, but extends from one end of the line of lode to the other. Among the non-unionists are a number of students and experience men. But the unionists say they, too, must join the union or leave work. These men include university and School of Mines students, who are undergoing their qualifying course, but the unionists say no exception
