PROFESSOR BRAGG AND THE ROYAL SOCIETY.

At a meeting of the Council of the School of Mines and Industries, held on Monday, the president (Sir Langdon Beynon) said that since their last meeting a distinction had been conferred on one of their members—a distinction of a kind that an impression might be considered as not being allowed to pass unnoticed. He referred, of course, to the fact that news had been received in Adelaide that Professor Bragg had been elected a fellow of the Royal Society. On behalf of the council he most warmly congratulated him. It was true that Professor Bragg had received the gold medal of the scientific world. The School of Mines was a scientific institution, and as such not only rejoiced in the honour of which the professor had made the recipient, but felt that to some extent it shared it. Professor Bragg was the third fellow of the Royal Society to be appointed to a seat on the council. The other two were Sir Charles Todd and Professor Stirling. He was sure he expressed the feelings of all his fellow members when he hoped that Professor Bragg would not only live long to enjoy the honor, but that he would continue to show how his scientific achievements had increased the present great distinction attaching to membership of the Royal Society. Other members of the council expressed their thanks to the president for having brought the matter before the council and for his words of congratulation. Professor Bragg had been appointed on Professor Bragg, and they cordially endorsed all that he had said. Professor Bragg was appointed on the advice of the council, and it was thanks to the president and members of the council for their wise and congratulations.

UNIVERSITY HONOURS LISTS.

To the Editor.
Sir,—The writer "Oner," in The Register of March 27, was at great pains to cast as much discredit as possible on the Western Australian secondary schools. He deprecates the fact of education as well as the best interests of the students. The University department is committed to the best interests of the students on Friday. Lectures will begin on Monday next.
