A HERMENEUTIC PHENOMENOLOGICAL INQUIRY INTO THE LIVED EXPERIENCE OF MUSLIM PATIENTS IN AUSTRALIAN HOSPITALS

Nooredin Mohammadi
RGN, BSN, MSN (Comm. Health Nurse)

A thesis submitted for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy of the University of Adelaide of South Australia, Australia

Faculty of Health Sciences
Discipline of Clinical Nursing
TABLE OF CONTENTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>TABLE OF CONTENTS</td>
<td>i</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LIST OF FIGURES</td>
<td>vi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ABSTRACT</td>
<td>vii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DECLARATION</td>
<td>ix</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ACKNOWLEDGEMENT</td>
<td>x</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DEDICATION</td>
<td>xii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>INTRODUCTION</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1.0. Introduction</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1.1. Background</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1.1.1. Islam: An Overview</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1.1.2. Islam</td>
<td>3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1.1.3. Muslim and Islam in the world</td>
<td>5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1.1.4. Islamic beliefs and teachings</td>
<td>7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1.1.5. Muslim population in Australia</td>
<td>12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1.1.6. Caring from an Islamic perspective</td>
<td>14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1.2. Significance of the Study</td>
<td>16</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1.3. Purpose of the Study</td>
<td>17</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1.4. Research Question</td>
<td>18</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1.5. Organisation of the Study</td>
<td>18</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1.6. Summary</td>
<td>20</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LITERATURE REVIEW</td>
<td>21</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2.0. Introduction</td>
<td>21</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2.1. Culture</td>
<td>22</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2.1.1. Demographic change in Australia</td>
<td>22</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2.1.2. Definition of culture</td>
<td>24</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2.1.3. The Impact of culture on health care</td>
<td>27</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2.2. Minority Groups</td>
<td>29</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2.2.1. Introduction to the discussion about minority groups</td>
<td>29</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2.2.2. Definition of minority groups</td>
<td>30</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
2.2.3. Majority-minority relations ................................................................. 31
2.2.4. Minority groups and health care ...................................................... 33

2.3. Equity of Health Services .................................................................... 35

2.4. Cultural Diversity in Nursing .............................................................. 40
   2.4.1. Introduction to importance of the issue ............................................. 40
   2.4.2. Cultural competence ................................................................. 42
   2.4.3. Cultural Competence Models in Nursing ........................................ 43
      2.4.3.1. Lieninger’s Model ................................................................. 43
      2.4.3.2. Giger & Davidhizar’s Model .................................................. 45
      2.4.3.3. Purnell’s Model ............................................................... 47
      2.4.3.4. Campinha-Bacote’s Model ................................................... 48
      2.4.3.5. Papadopoulos, Tilki and Taylor’s Model ................................. 49
   2.4.4. Overview of culturally competent nursing ....................................... 49

2.5. Experience of People from Minority Groups ...................................... 53

2.6. Summary ............................................................................................... 56

RESEARCH METHODOLOGY ...................................................................... 57

3.0. Introduction ......................................................................................... 57

3.1. Phenomenology ................................................................................. 57

3.2. Foundation and Development .......................................................... 60

3.3. Phenomenological Research ............................................................. 63
   3.3.1. Pure or transcendental phenomenology ........................................ 64
   3.3.2. Existential phenomenology .......................................................... 68
   3.3.3. Hermeneutic phenomenology ...................................................... 70

3.4. Methodological Issues ....................................................................... 76

3.5. Summary .............................................................................................. 79

RESEARCH METHODS ............................................................................ 80

4.0. Introduction ......................................................................................... 80

4.1. The Method: Overview ....................................................................... 81

4.2. The Study Design ............................................................................... 82
   4.2.1. Turning to the phenomenon .......................................................... 83
   4.2.2. Investigating experience in the participants’ world ....................... 84
   4.2.3. Reflecting on the essential themes ............................................... 84
   4.2.4. Hermeneutic phenomenological writing and rewriting ................. 85
A Hermeneutic Phenomenological Inquiry into the Lived Experience of Muslim Patients

4.2.5. Maintain a strong and oriented relation.........................................................86
4.2.6. Balancing the research context.................................................................87

4.3. The Study Participants.................................................................................. 87
4.3.1. Inclusion.......................................................................................................88
4.3.2. Exclusion criteria.......................................................................................88

4.4. Recruitment................................................................................................... 90
4.4.1. Hospital-based Recruitment.................................................................90
4.4.2. Snowball Sampling..................................................................................91
4.4.3. Advertising...............................................................................................92
4.4.4. Contact with Key People.........................................................................93
4.4.5. The Recruited Participants......................................................................94

4.5. Participants numbers................................................................................. 95

4.6. Ethical Consideration.................................................................................... 96
4.6.1. Participant Information............................................................................96
4.6.2. Privacy.......................................................................................................97
4.6.3. Consent.....................................................................................................98
4.6.4. Specific Considerations...........................................................................99
4.6.5. Data Storage.............................................................................................100

4.7. Data Generation (Interviews)..................................................................... 100

4.8. Data Analysis Process.................................................................................. 106

4.9. Rigour........................................................................................................... 108

4.10. Summary..................................................................................................... 110

INTRODUCING PARTICIPANTS........................................................................ 112

5.0. Introduction.................................................................................................. 112
5.1. The Participants: Overview......................................................................... 113
5.2. Fariba........................................................................................................... 114
5.3. Marzieh........................................................................................................ 116
5.4. Yasamine...................................................................................................... 118
5.5. Sarah............................................................................................................ 119
5.6. Akbar........................................................................................................... 120
5.7. Shakira......................................................................................................... 122
5.8. Ali.................................................................................................................. 123
5.9. Habib ........................................................................................................................... 125
5.10. Fatmeh ...................................................................................................................... 126
5.11. Hamid ....................................................................................................................... 127
5.12. Hussein .................................................................................................................... 128
5.13. Huda ......................................................................................................................... 130
5.14. Yalda ........................................................................................................................ 131
5.15. Summary .................................................................................................................. 132

THE PROCESS OF FINDING MEANING ..................................................................... 133

6.0. Introduction ............................................................................................................. 133
6.1. The Process of Data Analysis: an Overview ............................................................ 133
6.2. Analysis informed by Gadamer .............................................................................. 134
   6.2.1. Identification of pre-understandings ................................................................. 135
   6.2.2. Gaining understanding through dialogue ......................................................... 137
   5.2.3. Fusion of horizons ............................................................................................ 138
6.3. Reflexive activities ................................................................................................. 139
6.4. Thematic analysis ................................................................................................... 140
   6.4.1. Wholistic approach ......................................................................................... 141
   6.4.2. Selective approach .......................................................................................... 141
   6.4.3. Detailed approach .......................................................................................... 148
6.5. Interpretive activities .............................................................................................. 149
6.6. Summary ................................................................................................................ 150

UNDERSTANDING THE EXPERIENCE OF BEING A MUSLIM PATIENT .......... 151

7.0. Introduction ............................................................................................................ 151
7.1. The Challenge of Living Islam in Hospital ............................................................ 152
7.2. Being-thrown-into-an-un-everyday-world ........................................................... 155
   7.2.1. The awareness of self ...................................................................................... 155
   7.2.2. Being an outsider ............................................................................................ 159
7.3. Living-Islam-in-the-un-everyday-world ................................................................. 164
   7.3.1. Being the same and different ......................................................................... 165
   7.3.2. Hindrances to Being Muslim .......................................................................... 174
   7.3.3. Adapting-to-the-un-everyday-world ............................................................... 179
7.4. Summary

DISCUSSION OF FINDINGS, IMPLICATIONS, AND CONCLUSION

8.0. Introduction

8.1. Overview of Findings

8.2. Limitation of the Study

8.3. Discussion of Study Findings

8.4. Implications and Recommendations

8.5. Recommendations for Further Research

8.6. The Unique Contribution of This Study

8.7. Conclusion

REFERENCES

APPENDICES
LIST OF TABLES

Table 1-1: Geographic Distribution of Muslims in Australia, 2006 ......................... 13
Table 5-1: Description of Participants ................................................................. 114
Table 6-1: Moving from text to concept in thematic analysis process .................... 144
Table 6-2: Being-thrown-into-an-un-everyday-world .......................................... 146
Table 6-3: Living-Islam-in-the-un-everyday-world ............................................. 147
Table 6-4: Themes and sub-themes ................................................................. 148

LIST OF FIGURES

Figure 1-1: Population of Muslims around the world, 2002 .......................... 6
Figure 1-2: Population of Sunni and Shia around the world, 2002 .................. 7
Figure 1-3: Australian Muslim population by state and territory, 2001 .......... 12
ABSTRACT

In the past few years, many people with an Islamic background have settled in Australia. Within the health care context, this means that health care providers must modify the care provided to ensure it meets the needs of this culturally diverse population. Little nursing research has focused on understanding the perceptions and experiences of Muslim people within health care systems, particularly in Australia. This study provided an opportunity to explore, and document the experience of the hospitalisation for Islamic people and thereby advance the available information upon which important nursing care decisions that relate to this group can be more informatively made.

This study aims to explore and interpret the lived experience of thirteen Muslim patients who had been hospitalised in an Australian hospital. The hermeneutic phenomenology of Heidegger (1967/1996), the philosophical hermeneutics of Gadamer (1989), and the ideas of van Manen (1990/1996) underpin this study. The meaning and understanding of the everyday experience of Muslim patient in a non-Islamic hospital is achieved through interpretation of the participants’ stories. Data were generated using unstructured audio-taped interviews from participants. The interviews were transcribed verbatim and analysed, then interpreted using phenomenological methods.

The two themes to emerge from the participants’ experiences are: Being-thrown-into-an-un-everyday-world and living-Islam-in-the-un-everyday-world. The theme of Being-thrown-into-an-un-everyday-world arose from the sub-themes of the awareness of self and Being an outsider. The theme living-Islam-in-the-un-everyday-world was drawn from the three sub-themes of Being the same and different, hindrances to being Muslim, and adapting-to-the-un-everyday-world.

The findings of this study provide an insight into the experience of Muslims being cared for in Australian hospitals. It is hoped that this interpretation will make a significant contribution to the care of Muslim patients by having health professionals consider how this group could be cared for in a culturally sensitive manner. It is not intended as a prescription for care but draws the reader to reflect on aspects of the Muslim faith and how this may impact on individuals experience when in hospital. The scope of this study and the dearth of available research in this area conclude that much more research needs to be undertaken.
DECLARATION

THE UNIVERSITY OF ADELAIDE

This work contains no material which has been accepted for the award of any degree or diploma in any university or other tertiary institution and, to the best of my knowledge and belief, contains no material previously published or written by another person, except where due reference has been made in the text.

I give consent to this copy of my thesis, when deposited in the University Library, being available for loan and photocopying

Signed:

Dated:
ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

It has always been my goal to write a doctoral thesis, one day…! For many years it did not look favourable at all: first being the father of three teenagers, something I never regretted but also something that does not make academic life easily attainable. In addition, I had to confront personal set-back, family problems, change a country, change of lifestyle, change of language and many other things that in the end proved not to be real impediments but rather learning opportunities. But of course, this research journey would not have been possible if it were not for the support of family members and many friends. Without acknowledging those individuals who assisted me in this process, this dissertation would not be completed. Besides I have now reached a stage where I can regard the people I met my path as people who taught me something, sometimes the hard way. I would like to thank them all for giving me this opportunity.

I would like to use a somewhat chronological order (if possible!). First and foremost, Thanks to God. Thanks to my parents who supported me for better for worse. I would like to say thanks to my brothers and sisters for being such a warm-hearted, helpful and supportive. Furthermore very special thanks to Aghdas, my wife, my mentor, my friend for her ongoing support. I greatly appreciate her intellectual input, her caring attitude, and her loving support. I cannot express my gratitude to my father-in-law for his generosity, faith, and kindness. Thanks to my children Negar, Hamed, and Mohammad for being so patient with me during all these years, and for going with me through all the ups and downs along the way.

Thanks to Dr. Oskoei for being a mentor and a very special person. Special thanks to Dr. Nowroozi, I could not have achieve anything without his support. I would like to say thanks to Professor Jabalameli, Dr Ayati, Dr Arshadi, Mr Moghadam, Mr Tavakoli, Dr Ahmadi, Dr Radkhah, Dr Noraee, Dr Moteian, and Ms Naeini for being good friends despite the distance.

Special sincere appreciation to my friends, teacher-colleagues, and former supervisor who had an invaluable input into this thesis. Special thanks also to the staff and administration and the students of the Nursing faculty of the Iran University of Medical
Many persons have contributed to this thesis. First, I would like to thank my principal supervisors, Dr David Evans, for his guidance and wisdom which has been so necessary for me to complete this task. His knowledge and patience have been invaluable. Also, I would like to thank my co-supervisor, Dr Tina Jones, whose perceptive intelligence and analytical ability has been a huge asset to me. Without their efficiency, it would have taken a longer time to finish the manuscript. From Tina I have learned that anything and everything can be criticised. And, if it were not for David, I would never have written this thesis in the first place. Thanks for inviting me to studies of multiculturalism when I came to Adelaide. I offer a special thank you to Rick Wiechula whose wisdom and patience made this project such a rewarding experience for me. I would also like to thank Professor Alan Pearson, Professor Alison Tierney, Professor Helen McCutcheon, Dr. Judy Magarey, and staffs in the Discipline of Clinical Nursing.

To be a student at the Discipline of Clinical Nursing in Adelaide has been a great adventure. My gratitude goes to Albert Yip, Maen Abu-Qamar, and Jacqui and to all other doctoral students for intellectual challenges they have offered through the years, and my special thanks to Di Wicket Amanda Rischbeith, and Victoria Williamson for being good friends and for a creating a good student community at the PhD room.

I would like to direct a special thank to the participants and people who helped me to recruit research participants. I would like to acknowledge all the people who have contributed to this thesis in one way or another even if they have not been personally named above.

And finally, my greatest gratitude goes again to Aghdas, my wife, who with great patience has supported me and during writing of the thesis has taken care of our children and managed all other things that come with making a household function.

Adelaide, August 2007
Nooredin Mohammadi
DEDICATION

This thesis is dedicated to Muslim patients and those health professionals who care for them. In particular, I dedicate this work to the thirteen volunteered Muslim patients who shared their stories so willingly and openly with me.

And in the memory of my father-in-law and Professor Parviz Jabalameli special supporter and inspirations who gave me support and encouragement throughout my life.