THE PLAY AND THE AUTHORESS.

The THEATRE GUILD Committee is anxious to continue its policy of presenting at least one Australian play each year. The present production, "Morning Sacrifice", is a prize winning play by an Australian-born authoress. These are two good reasons for its presentation, but there are others. The writing of the play itself ably presents the detail of its general subject; it contains worth-while ideas; it has some excellent samples of what is practically called "good theatre." The cast is a completely feminine one—not an easy medium with which to make a successful and satisfying full length play. In this work it has been accomplished.

This play was first presented at the Repertory Theatre in Perth, on 8th October, 1942, during the Western Australian Drama Festival of that year.

The writer, Dymphna Cusack, was born at Wyalong Goldfields; she was educated in New South Wales and took an Arts course at the Sydney University. She has been writing since the age of twelve, and many of her short stories have been published in London and Australia.

In recent years Dymphna Cusack has directed her attention seriously to play writing. In 1936 she won the Anzac Fellowship Prize for her play "Anniversary." Her first three-act play, "Red Sky at Morning", has been widely produced and also filmed. In 1942 she won the Western Australian Drama Festival Prize with "Morning Sacrifice"; and the same award again in 1943 with another play, "Comets Soon Pass."

Her published novels include "Jungfrau" and, in co-authorship with Miles Franklin, "Pioneers on Parade."
