THE EXPEDITION'S PROGRAMME.

Setting out from Hobart at the beginning of December, Mr. Ek涤, the leader of the expedition, and his party sailed for Macquarie Island, where a party was left in charge of Capt. Scott and Sir Ernest Shackleton. From there they were to proceed to the coast nearest to the magnetic pole, which lies about 200 miles south of Cape Crozier. Here the main party, under command of Dr. Mawson, landed. The Aurora next proceeded to Cape Crozier and to the Antarctic continent. Mawson and his party were unable to maintain wireless communication with Hobart and the rest of the expedition, but it was intended that from Macquarie Island the expedition should make an attempt to penetrate southward along the 80th parallel, which on a plot of Chart, Nares touched in 1774. The 1,500 miles of land or islands of the first and third parties were to be land, and an extension on either side would be water. The party was marked out as a natural possession of Australia, and it was intended that by this time it would be a matter of some importance to the world that it is, in fact, for Albany or Hobart. The party left Cape Crozier on January 15th, and reached the Aurora on January 24th.
