PRODUCTION BY TEACHERS.

One of the earliest recommendations of the Commission was that the duties of the teacher should be relieved of the daily routine of examining and marking school records, and this work be carried out by the local inspectors. The recommendation has already been given effect to, and we have no doubt that the teachers will welcome it.

MEDICAL INSPECTION OF CHILDREN.

The commission met Dr. George Hallo in Sydney, and we have every reason to believe that the education of children and parents can be done by the medical profession. The Government already has a system of medical inspection in place, and it is to be hoped that this system will be continued.

INSPECTION OF PRIVATE SCHOOLS.

"In South Australia, we have no system of inspection by the Government of private schools, but with regard to the attendance of the children in the private schools, the attendance is fixed, and the Government should have some method of inspection. We have not been able to get any information from the private schools as to how many children are attending them. The Government should have some system of inspection for private schools.

SYSTEM OF ITINERANT TEACHERS.

"Another class of children, to the question of which I should like to draw your attention, are those who are attending the schools under the system of itinerant teachers. It is impossible to estimate the number of children attending the schools under this system, but there is no doubt that it would be very difficult for the Government to get any information from the schools as to the number of children attending them. I have been informed that there are schools under this system, and it is impossible to get any information from the schools as to the number of children attending them. I have been informed that there are schools under this system, and it is impossible to get any information from the schools as to the number of children attending them.

EDUCATION COMMISSION.

Adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Massey for the removal of the local school boards, and the re-organisation of the Education Department. Mr. CONVERSE said, in continuing his remarks on this subject, that he hoped the Government would see its way clear to adopt the recommendations of the Education Commission. He regretted that the Government had not made more use of the advantages of the system of education and training of teachers, and the advantages of the system of education and training of teachers, and the Government should be encouraged to carry out these recommendations. He hoped the Government would see its way clear to adopt the recommendations of the Education Commission.

Mr. COBB, in reply, said that the Government had already adopted the recommendations of the Education Commission, and regretted that he had not had more opportunity of discussing the matter. He had been informed that the Government had already adopted the recommendations of the Education Commission. He hoped the Government would see its way clear to adopt the recommendations of the Education Commission. He regretted that the Government had not made more use of the advantages of the system of education and training of teachers, and the advantages of the system of education and training of teachers, and the Government should be encouraged to carry out these recommendations. He hoped the Government would see its way clear to adopt the recommendations of the Education Commission.

Mr. COBB, in reply, said that the Government had already adopted the recommendations of the Education Commission, and regretted that he had not had more opportunity of discussing the matter. He had been informed that the Government had already adopted the recommendations of the Education Commission. He hoped the Government would see its way clear to adopt the recommendations of the Education Commission. He regretted that the Government had not made more use of the advantages of the system of education and training of teachers, and the advantages of the system of education and training of teachers, and the Government should be encouraged to carry out these recommendations. He hoped the Government would see its way clear to adopt the recommendations of the Education Commission.

Mr. COBB, in reply, said that the Government had already adopted the recommendations of the Education Commission, and regretted that he had not had more opportunity of discussing the matter. He had been informed that the Government had already adopted the recommendations of the Education Commission. He hoped the Government would see its way clear to adopt the recommendations of the Education Commission. He regretted that the Government had not made more use of the advantages of the system of education and training of teachers, and the advantages of the system of education and training of teachers, and the Government should be encouraged to carry out these recommendations. He hoped the Government would see its way clear to adopt the recommendations of the Education Commission.

Mr. COBB, in reply, said that the Government had already adopted the recommendations of the Education Commission, and regretted that he had not had more opportunity of discussing the matter. He had been informed that the Government had already adopted the recommendations of the Education Commission. He hoped the Government would see its way clear to adopt the recommendations of the Education Commission. He regretted that the Government had not made more use of the advantages of the system of education and training of teachers, and the advantages of the system of education and training of teachers, and the Government should be encouraged to carry out these recommendations. He hoped the Government would see its way clear to adopt the recommendations of the Education Commission.

Mr. COBB, in reply, said that the Government had already adopted the recommendations of the Education Commission, and regretted that he had not had more opportunity of discussing the matter. He had been informed that the Government had already adopted the recommendations of the Education Commission. He hoped the Government would see its way clear to adopt the recommendations of the Education Commission. He regretted that the Government had not made more use of the advantages of the system of education and training of teachers, and the advantages of the system of education and training of teachers, and the Government should be encouraged to carry out these recommendations. He hoped the Government would see its way clear to adopt the recommendations of the Education Commission.

Mr. COBB, in reply, said that the Government had already adopted the recommendations of the Education Commission, and regretted that he had not had more opportunity of discussing the matter. He had been informed that the Government had already adopted the recommendations of the Education Commission. He hoped the Government would see its way clear to adopt the recommendations of the Education Commission. He regretted that the Government had not made more use of the advantages of the system of education and training of teachers, and the advantages of the system of education and training of teachers, and the Government should be encouraged to carry out these recommendations. He hoped the Government would see its way clear to adopt the recommendations of the Education Commission.