WOMEN WORKERS AND EDUCATION

ADDRESS BY MRS. MANSBRIDGE

ONE night in a Lancashire town, where the snow and the elements were so severe as to stop all traffic, out of 50 students of a women's college 47 were students of the University of Manchester, and not one of them was a man. The woman was a maid, and had travelled for three-quarters of an hour through a snow storm to sit in the lecture-room. Women in factories were teaching at the universities, and they had developed facilities in the male schools. In those days, a man was expected to write to his friend, and the woman was expected to write to her husband. Today, the situation has changed, and the woman is expected to write to her friend. In the past, women were not expected to work outside the home. Today, women are expected to work outside the home. In the past, women were not expected to have a voice in the public sphere. Today, women are expected to have a voice in the public sphere.

ADDRESS BY MRS. MANSBRIDGE

One evening in a Lancashire town, where the snow and the elements were so severe as to stop all traffic, out of 50 students of a women's college 47 were students of the University of Manchester, and not one of them was a man. The woman was a maid, and had travelled for three-quarters of an hour through a snow storm to sit in the lecture-room. Women in factories were teaching at the universities, and they had developed facilities in the male schools. In those days, a man was expected to write to his friend, and the woman was expected to write to her husband. Today, the situation has changed, and the woman is expected to write to her friend. In the past, women were not expected to work outside the home. Today, women are expected to work outside the home. In the past, women were not expected to have a voice in the public sphere. Today, women are expected to have a voice in the public sphere.