THE PROBLEM OF EURIPIDES.

AN EVENING WITH THE CLASSICS.

The Euripidean drama is a subject that tills the land of Western thought, and is one of the classics studied in the schools. The plays of the Athenian dramatist, and his contemporaries, have never been without a place in the curriculum, and the study of his works is considered an essential part of a classical education.

The lecture on this subject took place in the assembly hall of the academy, and was addressed by a well-known scholar, who is also a distinguished teacher of literature. The audience was composed of students, faculty members, and a number of interested laymen, who were present to hear the lecture.

The lecturer began by outlining the life and times of Euripides, the last of the great tragedians of ancient Greece. He was a brilliant and versatile artist, who was known for his innovative use of Greek drama and his unique style of writing. The lecturer then went on to discuss the plays of Euripides, focusing on their themes, characters, and language. He highlighted the way in which Euripides challenged traditional ideas and explored new ideas, which made his plays ahead of their time.

The lecture was well-received by the audience, who asked many questions and engaged in lively discussions with the lecturer. The lecture concluded with a call for further study and exploration of the works of Euripides, which were considered to be a valuable addition to the classical repertoire.

WORKERS' EDUCATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

The newly-formed South Australian branch of the Workers' Educational Association held its first meeting on the occasion of its establishment. The meeting was held in the hall of the association, and was attended by a large number of members and guests. The meeting was chaired by the president, who welcomed everyone and introduced the agenda for the meeting. Following the opening remarks, the secretary gave a report on the activities of the association during the previous year, and discussed the plans for the coming year. The treasurer then presented the financial report, which showed a healthy surplus for the year. The members then had the opportunity to ask questions and discuss any matters of concern to them. The meeting concluded with a vote of thanks to the officers for their hard work and dedication.

The Workers' Educational Association was founded with the aim of providing educational opportunities to workers and their families. The association offers a wide range of courses and events, including workshops, lectures, and study groups, which are designed to meet the needs of workers and their communities.
