The New England School of Anthropology

The New England School of Anthropology has a charter and a college of Anthropology, and is located in the New England region of the United States. The school was founded in 1900 and is one of the oldest and most respected institutions of its kind in the world. The school's mission is to provide students with a comprehensive understanding of human culture and society, and to foster research that contributes to the advancement of knowledge in the field of anthropology.

Fieldwork and Research

Fieldwork is an integral part of the New England School of Anthropology's program. Students are encouraged to engage in fieldwork in order to gain a deeper understanding of the cultures they are studying. The school provides resources and support to students conducting fieldwork, including funding for travel and living expenses, as well as access to local experts and resources.

Academic Programs

The school offers a variety of academic programs, including undergraduate and graduate degrees in anthropology. Students can choose to specialize in areas such as cultural anthropology, biological anthropology, archaeology, and linguistic anthropology.

Faculty and Resources

The faculty at the New England School of Anthropology is comprised of distinguished scholars and researchers. The school also has a well-equipped library and research facilities, including laboratories and archives.

Conclusion

The New England School of Anthropology is a leading institution in the field of anthropology, providing students with a rigorous and comprehensive education in the study of human culture and society. Through its fieldwork and research programs, the school contributes to the advancement of knowledge in anthropology and remains committed to fostering a diverse and inclusive academic community.