Effect on Wages.

Has the fact that nations keep up armaments as a means of an effect upon general economic conditions?

"Undoubtedly. The increase in taxation and the consequent burden on the poorer classes, good citizens, and trade, the good condition of the military forces have done more to keep up the cost of living all over the world. Borrowing for war purposes has been necessary for war equipment, and the loan-money has increased in foreign countries. And wages must increase also, but may never rise as fast as the cost of living, and where salaries are paid these are raised in increased in anything like the proportion they should be and depreciation.

How does the upkeep of armaments affect the position of the workers by the war, and the upkeep is great. That the upkeep has to be done by those who do not work, the direct result is that a country does not earn as much as it should, and that the industrial enterprises languish. Taking this country, there is a depression of industry and a depression of wages, because of the war. The lower classes cannot afford to pay taxes, and the state may have to employ more money than it should have in order to support these idle men.

What do you consider will bring about an end to the war, and will affect the general condition of the people?

"Two things. Firstly, the impending prospect of the war makes it impossible on the part of some nations; and, secondly, education. Every man who thinks for himself in this war will see that he is directly interested in it. At the same time, I know that it is not just the cause, but that it is also the future. However, I believe that the war is coming to an end, that it is not just the countries of Europe, but that the world is going to war, and that this will be the time when all nations will be in a better position."

Why is War Wrong.

"The arguments against the war are many and varied. Firstly, the cost of war is enormous. Secondly, the loss of lives is terrible. Thirdly, the destruction of property and the damage to the environment. Fourthly, the psychological effect of war on individuals and society. Fifthly, the economic impact of war on the global economy. Sixthly, the impact of war on the environment and the natural world. Seventhly, the moral and ethical implications of war. Eighthly, the political consequences of war. Ninthly, the social consequences of war. Tenthly, the spiritual consequences of war."

The People Do Not Want War.

"Universal Peace! The cry goes up from a handful of enthusiast amidst the noise and racket of modern civilization. It is a call for a better world, a world where men can live together in harmony, without war and violence. It is a call for a world where every man and woman can live in peace and security, without fear of attack or danger. It is a call for a world where every man and woman can live in dignity and freedom, without oppression or exploitation. It is a call for a world where every man and woman can live in prosperity and abundance, without poverty or want."

The Cry for Peace.

"The cry for peace is the voice of the oppressed, the voice of the dispossessed, the voice of the marginalized. It is the voice of the millions who have suffered under the yoke of war, and it is the voice of the millions who wish to be free. It is the voice of the millions who have dreamed of a better world, and it is the voice of the millions who will not live in a world of war."

The Cry for Peace.

"The cry for peace is the voice of the millions of men, women, and children who have suffered and died in the wars of the past. It is the voice of the millions of men, women, and children who have been left behind, and who have been forgotten. It is the voice of the millions of men, women, and children who have been left without hope, and who have been left alone."

The Cry for Peace.

"The cry for peace is the voice of the millions of men, women, and children who have dreamed of a better world, and who have dreamed of a world where they can live in peace and security, without fear of attack or danger. It is the voice of the millions of men, women, and children who have dreamed of a world where they can live in dignity and freedom, without oppression or exploitation. It is the voice of the millions of men, women, and children who have dreamed of a world where they can live in prosperity and abundance, without poverty or want."