As the Chancellor had observed, South Australian interests were not without some hope of being advanced by the establishment of the Department of the Colony of South Australia. This was especially true in the case of the island of Kangaroo, which had been settled by the colonists and which was now ready to be opened up for further settlement. It was hoped that the Department would be able to bring about a greater development of the colony, and to make it a more con-mfortable and prosperous place for its inhabitants.

The Right Man

Dr. Mason, who had been appointed to the position of Chief Commissioner of Police, had made a number of statements of importance during his administration.
He had been a strong advocate of the necessity for a strong and efficient police force, and had made many reforms which had been welcomed by the public.

Dr. Mason was also a member of the Legislative Council, and had been active in promoting the interests of the colony. He had been a friend of the people, and had always been ready to listen to their grievances and to do what he could to alleviate their sufferings.

The Commonwealth Various points of interest about the Commonwealth were discussed by Dr.
Mason, and it was agreed that the Government should continue to work towards the establishment of a strong and independent nation.

Dr. Mason then turned to the subject of the colonial defences, and said that the Government would do all in its power to secure the safety of the community. He had been active in promoting the establishment of a navy, and had been a strong advocate of the need for a strong fleet.

Dr. Mason then turned to the subject of education, and said that the Government should continue its efforts to provide good schools for the children of the colony. He had been a strong advocate of the need for good schools, and had been a friend of the people in their effort to obtain a better education.

Dr. Mason then turned to the subject of finance, and said that the Government should continue to work for the benefit of the people. He had been a friend of the people, and had always been ready to listen to their grievances and to do what he could to alleviate their sufferings.
