THE WAR AND PROFESSIONAL PROSPECTS

Parents who are considering the possibilities of a medical career for their sons, and young people of both sexes who have no medical qualifications, to whether they shall enrol their names as medical students at the beginning of the course, may have some comfort in the assurance that the present period of suspension in their plans, owing to the unavoidable war, will not be without some consideration in their case. The University of Adelaide, which had already decided either to temporise until the last possible term, or to give up altogether the idea of becoming a hospital (says The Hospital), has indeed entered into an agreement with the Government to provide accommodation for a considerable number of medical students, and to provide medical instruction for them. The agreement has been entered into in such a way that it is expected to last at least three years, and that there will be no interruption of medical training until the war is over.

GERMANS IN MELBOURNE.

Refuse Naturalization.

MELBOURNE, October 29.

Further reference was made in the Legislative Assembly last night to the employment at work of Germans who refused to be naturalized.

Mr. Bayes read a letter from a well-known public official, dated October 21, which was tabled on Tuesday. The letter was as follows—

"Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, you asked me to draw the revocation of a legacy from the University to £15,000, in consequence of German influence there. I cannot give you particulars, but you can mention the fact of you like. If the facts as stated were correct, Mr. Bayes, there was need of action. The university should not be permitted to suffer through the presence of these men. There was a feeling of growing concern in the community, and the Government should endeavour to eject all men of the kind.

Mr. Graham said it was painful that two teachers should be allowed to remain at the university after they had refused to become naturalized British subjects. The Premier said the difficulty created was one which might be expected to occur in any country. A mistake was made in allowing naturalization papers to be taken out by Germans who declared themselves subject to German jurisdiction. The naturalization law of the Commonwealth was remarkably weak, and the Prime Minister should protect the interests of the community. He was satisfied that a large majority of the Germans settled in the Commonwealth were loyal British subjects. They were married to our kith and kin. Australians should not be subjected to extreme measures unless it was necessary. The Prime Minister had forebodings that the enemy would do things they should not have done if it was not for the protection it was giving to the enemy in the face of the enemy. If their enemies did things they should not have done it was no indication for Australians to be led astray.

The matter dropped without further discussion.

Rhodes Scholarship.

The attention of intending candidates for the Rhodes scholarship is drawn to an advertisement appearing in another column. Entries must reach the committee of selection at the University not later than December 1.

Medical Students and the War.

From "Helpful"—"A private letter from London states that the number of volunteers from the medical profession throughout the United Kingdom has been postponed, and all available doctors and nurses are being drafted to the front. A few days ago it was announced that the college at Rugby was a vast hospital, that patients were being treated all over the wounded on account of their own services. The college was sent to England without the necessary attendants, and the word was sent to them. Is it not possible for our medical men to do what the Germans have done? Can they not assist in this way, by offering their services? Medical men are in their third, fourth, and fifth years, even more than the members of medicolegal society, and are poor men, and are wanted. These students, if the University authorities would only show a little more enthusiasm, and offer a little more money, would be glad to do their duty for the man, and they are wanted.\"
