FRENCH EDUCATION

HIGH Ideals Cherished

ADDRESS BY DR. SEIFGDUR

Dr. Seifgudr, secretary of the French Mission at the University of Adelaide, and the members of the professorial staff at the University, were on Monday morning at the convocation in France. The Chancellor (Sir George Murray) presided.

Dr. Seifgudr said there were three grades of schools in France—primary, secondary, and superior. The primary school went State managed and free, and attendance was compulsory, the child not being taught in them. There were other free primary schools—mostly Catholic, which were not subsidised by the State. Parents could, if they wished, send their children to these. The children went to the primary schools from the age of six, but not till they were 12, when they received a certificate. Secondary teaching was given in which French was the first language. The ages of the pupils in these institutions ranged from seven or eight years to 18 or 19 years, and received from the State the degree of bachelor, which entitled them to attend the superior educational institutions, which existed in the University of the State, and also in the charge of the State. The principal University was that of Paris, but the last 20 or 25 years had seen a great revival of the provincial universities. At Nanterre, Narbonne, and Angers, the University of Paris covered all the ground of arts and sciences, but the provincial universities gave special instruction in the fine arts, music, and drawing. Speciality in medicine, law, and science was given, and the degrees were Master of Arts and Doctor of Science. Professor Neild's paper on the French education system has been awarded a very low prize. To obtain the State aid, among other things, the students have to sit for examinations in French and the other in English. The examinations of the board of examiners took place at the University of Paris, and the whole afternoon. If the students were entered sufficiently well, they had a chance to the General advancement of science, because of the great pressure on the State. The degree given by the University was that of the University of Paris, which is the Polytechnic of Paris, and institutions were provided for the study of the natural sciences in Paris. All the high schools of the French system had been established, and besides the Polytechnic, there were the three more schools of the French system.
The Junior Examinations

The University Examinations

It was feared by the University authorities that the examinations would be delayed by the strike on Thursday and the suspension of the tram services. The examinations were held in the Exhibition Building. The examination papers had been sent out for marking before the strike. The students who had postponed the ASE examination were to sit for the examinations on Wednesday. There was a delay of about three weeks, and there was some doubt about the possibility of the examinations being completed in time. Everything proceeded satisfactorily, with no interruptions from the examinations.

The Junior Examinations were held at the Institute of Technology. There was a very large attendance, with 250 students sitting for the examinations. The attendance was very satisfactory.
PEACE TIME AND EXAMINATIONS.

It is admirably difficult for students to study under peace conditions. We hope this present peace will allow the students to study.

Highly-regarded, for the past several years, has been the Peace Time, which offers students an opportunity to study during the last days of the year. The Peace Time is regarded as a period of rest and relaxation for students.
