THE UNIVERSITY CALENDAR.

1. Calendar of the University of Adelaide brings a mass of information about the institution, and particularly its doings during 1937, a year of great interest. Many of the regulations, and all the printed papers, have now to be relegated to storage, and only the 400 solid pages here, the list of graduands, and the list of famous Oxford and Cambridge dons, go well with the good reading. The chief interest of the course is in a few papers near the end, containing the notices of the University and its activities in 1937. The new Chief's address to the Senate was the most interesting item of the year, and Sir Langdon Bryan then read the Address to the Governor, which was followed by a vote of thanks.

The University now has over 300 of its courses open to students, and a few new ones have been opened. The Senate is still under the aegis of Professor Brown, who has been re-elected for a second term. The University has now over 400 students, and is making good progress. The new course in constitutional law is proving popular, and the University is now preparing for the opening of a new building in the University Park. The University has been granted a large amount of money for the new building, and it is expected that the work will be completed by the end of the year. The Knighthood which has been bestowed on the Lieutenant-Governor, Chief Justice of South Australia, visibly recognizes both the eminence of the position he holds and the personal merit of his incumbent. Sir George Murray has been a judge of the Supreme Court since May, 1915, and has filled the office of Chief Justice since January last year. In succeeding so great a judge as the late Sir Samuel Way he has an exceedingly high standard to live up to, but the expectations created by his distinguished record at the bar have been fully realized. He is a sound lawyer, and being no less industrious than learned, he has presided over the Supreme Court with a conscious degree of success, achieving it equally by his own profession and by the general public. Sir George Murray has a record which reflects honor on the State where he was born and received a part of his education. He has not only the substantial qualifications for the position he occupies, but is dignified and courteous in manner. His attractive personality has won for him the regard of the friends, who will join in warm congratulations on the latest honor conferred upon him by His Majesty the King. Sir George Murray is a comparatively young man, and should have many years before him to strengthen and add to the reputation he has already gained by his distinguished service to the State.
