LATE LIEUT. E. B. O'LEFFT.
Advice was received on Sunday from the military authorities that Second-Lieut. E. B. O'Lefft was killed in action on November 14th. Lieut. O'Lefft had been attached to the 2nd Battalion since the outbreak of the war, and his greatest ambition was to serve his country in the Australian Imperial Force. He was a popular and respected member of the 2nd Battalion, and his death has been deeply felt by his comrades. Lieut. O'Lefft had been an officer in the State Bank for 14 years, and his knowledge of banking and his ability to deal with customers effectively made him a valuable asset to the bank. He was an excellent sportsman, and his enthusiasm for football and cricket was well-known. Lieut. O'Lefft's death has been a great loss to the bank and the community, and he will be greatly missed.
Lieutenant E. Offeart.

UNIVERSITY WORK IN SOCIAL TRAINING

Within the last few years there has been an increasing interest in social work and it is developing at a fast pace. Special preparatory training in social work is being given at the universities and colleges, and there are now two full-time courses for voluntary workers. These courses are mainly designed for the work of the Salvation Army and the National Society for Women's Welfare, and are conducted by the Institute of Social Studies and the University of London.

The Joint Committee on Social Work Training, which was set up by the University of London in 1911, has now published a report on the training of social workers. The report emphasizes the importance of a broad education in the social sciences, and it is recommended that all social workers should receive a minimum of two years' training. The report also suggests that a three-year course should be offered for those who wish to specialize in social work.

The report recommends that social work should be taught in all universities and colleges, and that courses should be designed to meet the needs of different types of social work. It is suggested that courses should be offered in child welfare, mental hygiene, and health, and that there should be a special emphasis on the social and economic aspects of social work.

The report also recommends that social workers should be given opportunities for further study and research, and that they should be encouraged to participate in the development of social services. It is suggested that social workers should be given the chance to study in other countries, and that they should be encouraged to take part in international conferences and meetings.

The report concludes by stating that social workers are playing an important role in the development of social services, and that they should be given the opportunity to develop their skills and knowledge in a proper and effective way.
