IS THE PEACE TREATY JUST?

In the Daily Journal of August 4 an article headed "Is the Peace Treaty Just?" was published, written by Professor Phillipson. The article, written by Professor Phillipson in Astoria recently, is taken from the first part of his book, "The Peace Treaty," and is reprinted by the Daily Journal. In the first part of the article, the author expresses his opinion that the peace treaty is unjust.

PART I.

In your issue of August 4 you published an article entitled "Veritas." It is proposed to reply to your article with the following.

The treaty is unjust. It was signed and ratified without the consent of the Allied peoples. The treaty is unjust because it imposes upon nations the burden of paying compensation to other nations. The treaty is unjust because it gives too much power to the Allied governments.

1. The article is signed "Veritas." When the treaty is examined carefully by those who possess full knowledge of the documents, they will find that the text of the treaty is not in accordance with the terms agreed upon. The treaty was signed and ratified without the consent of the Allied peoples.

2. The treaty is unjust because it imposes upon nations the burden of paying compensation to other nations. The treaty was signed and ratified without the consent of the Allied peoples.

3. The treaty is unjust because it gives too much power to the Allied governments. The treaty was signed and ratified without the consent of the Allied peoples.
