Teaching Staff Comments.

A report of the University of Melbourne's academic staff has been released, recommending changes to the number of students and teachers. The report was the result of a series of meetings with the teaching staff. The University had previously decided to reduce the number of students to 300, but this recommendation was not followed. Instead, the number of students was increased to 400.

The report also recommends that the teaching staff be increased by 50%. This will allow for a more comprehensive and effective teaching environment.

HISTORY.

The history of the University is briefly described, mentioning its founding in 1854 and the challenges faced by early students. The report highlights the University's growth and expansion over the years. It also notes the importance of the University in the cultural and intellectual life of the community.

GEOLGY.

A brief overview of the University's geology program is provided, highlighting the importance of this field in understanding the earth's processes. The report also mentions the University's contributions to the field through research and publications.

PATRiotic.

The University is commended for its patriotic efforts, particularly during World War I. The report notes the University's role in education and training of military personnel.

THE UNIVERSITY TO THE EDITOR OF THE ARGUS.

In response to a previous letter from the editor of the Argus, the University has written to express its concerns and suggest improvements. The letter highlights the University's commitment to providing a high-quality education and its desire to maintain a strong relationship with the community.

ADMISSIONS.

A meeting of the admissions committee was held to discuss the admittance process. The committee agreed to increase the number of interviews and to consider more factors in the decision-making process.
