THE MUSIC CON

FRIDAY morning, the fifth day of the Music Teachers' Conference, was devoted to the study of the various aspects of the art of music teaching. An interesting paper was presented by Dr. Grattan, supervisor of music, in which he discussed the importance of practical experience in the teaching of music. He emphasized the need for a more thorough and systematic approach to the subject, and suggested that teachers should be encouraged to take a more active role in the musical life of the community.

Dr. Grattan's paper was followed by a presentation by Mr. Davids, a music teacher from a neighboring school. He discussed the importance of involving students in practical musical activities, such as participating in ensembles and performing in public. He also stressed the importance of fostering a love of music in students from a young age.

In the afternoon session, the conference focused on the role of music in education. Dr. Davies, the director of the music department at a local university, presented a paper on the integration of music into the curriculum. He argued that music should be taught in a way that is relevant to students' lives, and that it should be taught in a way that is engaging and fun.

The conference concluded with a panel discussion on the future of music education. The panelists included a music teacher from a local high school, a music therapist, and a musicologist. They discussed the challenges facing music education, and the need for greater support from the community.

Overall, the conference was a success, and it was clear that there is a strong desire among music teachers and educators to improve the quality of music education. It was agreed that there is a need for more resources and support to help teachers and students achieve their goals.
