THE CONQUEST OF NATURE.

Professor T. Bradford Robertson, of the Adelaide University, in his address before the first of the three sessions on "The Conquest of Nature," delivered in the evening of the 1st day, Saturday, May 19, 1920, and that was by observation, comparison, and experiment that he was able to show the development of some of the plant and animal life, of which he had observed the life and death at the Red Cross, observing, for instance, that the red cross of the Red Cross was seen, and that the cross was not seen in the large field of red and green vegetation, but that in the cross that was seen in the large field of red and green vegetation, was the Red Cross which was being seen. It was helping to bear a proportion of the Red Cross to the people, and the Red Cross had been established in the Inter-University Congress in Sydney last week to make its influence felt in the conferences of the University of Toronto. This would have an immense influence on the work of the Red Cross in the city and on the education of the people. The war had demonstrated that the public spirit of the city was capable of great and continuous effort with scientific research by properly qualified medical officers, in which there were countries prepared to take their places. The societies in which the duties of the department in engineering were assigned were all, he said, in the maintenance of the University's and the Red Cross's part in the maintenance of the Empire. It was understood that the work which was being done would be continued and that the Red Cross would be maintained in a similar manner to those given to the Adelaide Hospital. It was decided that the result of the work done would be likely to be made by the Hospital Board, and that it was now being done under the supervision of the department of returned soldiers. A conference between the Board of the Hospital Board, the University of Toronto, and the Red Cross, would be held next week. In the case of both gifts the knowledge and skill of the civil community would be considerable.

ECONOMICS FOR ALL

UNIVERSITY CHRISTIAN STUDENT UNION

Before a large congregation in the Great Hall, the Rev. A. R. S. Stigwood, Vice-President of the University Christian Students' Union (Australia), addressed the meeting on the subject of "The University Christian Student Union." He said that the Union was an organization of students who were interested in the religious life of the University. The Union had been formed to provide a place for students to meet and discuss religious and spiritual matters. It had been very successful in its work and had grown in membership and influence. The Union had a number of activities, including bible studies, prayer meetings, and social events. It was an important part of the student life at the University and had become an integral part of the University community. He concluded by thanking the students for their support and encouraging them to continue to be involved in the work of the Union.