IS THE PEACE TREATY JUST?

From Edwin Ashby, Blackfriars

The following quotations from Sir Philip Sassoon's editorial article, published in the London Times, are appropriate to the subject discussed in your letter.

"For nearly two years of incessant fighting, the world has been bemoaning the fate of men and women in the face of death. In 1914, the British Empire and its allies decided to make war to end all war. They were confident they could achieve their goal."

"The Treaty of Versailles was a harsh document. It imposed heavy financial burdens on Germany, limited its military, and required it to accept responsibility for starting the war."

The Peace Treaty is not just for the present generation. It is for future generations. It is for all of us. It is a step towards peace and prosperity for all.

SCIENCE AND THE CLASSICS.

In my recent lecture on the classics and modern science, I discussed the ways in which these two fields can complement each other. Science and the classics are not mutually exclusive. They can coexist and thrive together.

On Friday evening the Classics Association held a meeting at the University of Oxford. Mr. W. B. Baxley presided over the meeting, and the audience was addressed by Professor T. Bradford Robertson. He delivered an interesting and instructive address on the classics and modern science. He discussed the ways in which these two fields can complement each other.

"Science and the classics are not mutually exclusive. They can coexist and thrive together."

IN MEMORY OF DANTE.

A FASCINATING LECTURE

On Wednesday there was a fascinating lecture on the life and literature of Dante. The speaker was a well-known scholar and author, and the audience was captivated by his engaging presentation.

"Dante was a poet and thinker who lived in the 14th century. He is known for his work 'The Divine Comedy,' which is a poetic exploration of the afterlife.

"Dante lived in a time of great political and social upheaval. He wrote about his observations and ideas in a variety of works, including his poetry.

"The speaker's lecture was a fascinating exploration of Dante's life and work. He discussed the poet's beliefs and the cultural context in which he lived.

"Dante's work has endured for centuries, and it continues to inspire and engage readers today.

"In memory of Dante, we must celebrate his legacy and continue to study his work."
