THE UNIVERSITY PROCESSION.

From "F.K.K."—The true significance of the expense of the University Procession must be more clearly illustrated than by the official, childish, hungry for publicity, and religious sects at the hands of those who, as students, form a centre of light, with whom our national interests, at least, are no concern. The procession stated to be a day of nothing important, but in fact, it is a day of considerable importance.

When I was a student, the procession was always attended with ceremonies and protocol, and I cannot help thinking that the presence of the Lord Mayor and the City Corporation, with their carriages and attendants, added to the dignity and prestige of the occasion.

The procession of students, I understand, included the usual bands and banners, and I am glad to see that the University is being taken seriously by the students, and that they are not content with mere show and display.

I cannot understand why the procession is not more widely attended by the public, as it is a day when the University is being celebrated in a manner that is worthy of its greatness.

I trust that the University officials will take steps to make the procession more noticeable, and that the students will continue to take an active part in the celebration of this day of national importance.
