THE UNIVERSITY.

TWO SPLENDID LEGACIES.

In FURTHERANCE OF MEDICAL SCIENCE.

The University of Adelaide has received a legacy of £23,000 under the will of Mrs. Jane Marks, of Grange, for the encouragement of the study of medical science. The bequest is almost entirely devoted to the interests of the medical students, who will receive a legacy valued at £2,000, from the estate jointly owned by the late Mrs. A. F. Keith-Sharland, and her sister, Mrs. A. F. Keith-Sharland, intended for the advancement of medical research.

In announcing the receipt of these bequests, the Chancellor (Sir George Hurd) said much of the present prosperity of the University was due to the personal aid given to it from time to time by Parliament, and more especially by the Parliament now in session; but the University owed its origin to public charity, and it was satisfactory to note that the sum of £23,000 was a contribution towards the University's endowment of the medical student's fund. The University was founded in 1874, and the first President was the Rev. C. J. Cuthbert. The first academic building was completed in 1876, and the University was opened for the first term in 1877. The University占地面积 is approximately 250 acres, and it is located in the city of Adelaide, South Australia. The University offers a wide range of undergraduate and postgraduate programs, including degrees in arts, science, commerce, law, engineering, and education. The University has a strong research focus and is ranked among the top universities in the world.
