MENTAL DEFECTIVES
MOVEMENT TO ESTABLISH A CLINIC

"A CRUSADE AGAINST IGNORANCE." A public meeting was held in the Lester Hall of the University of Sydney last Tuesday evening in connection with the Public Health Department’s proposal of launching a movement to raise $60,000 for the purpose of establishing a mental defect clinic at the University of Sydney, N.S.W., provided over a good attendance.

A little more than a year ago a resolution was passed at a meeting of the community, organized by Professor Berry, affirming the desirability of a mental defect clinic in the city. A deputation was then sent to the University of Sydney, and the committee, with Sir Joseph Verco as its chairman, met several times to consider the question. The committee formulated the following "ultimate ideal" of the problem:

1. To conduct a survey of mental and medical defects of all and ages in Australia.
2. The mental examination of children at school age should be considered.
3. Special treatment of mentally defective children should be attempted.
4. Correlation of institutions for the care of defectives, seeking to bring them together for the purpose of study and treatment.
5. Examinations of children by a special psychologist in the study of normal development. (The terms "defect" and "deficiency" are used by the committee in this connection.

It was estimated that the amount required to complete the survey, including staff, clinics, and costs of equipment, might be $100,000. The committee hoped that the state of his research in the field of mental defects would be established, and that further funds would be forthcoming to complete the survey.

The chairman, Sir Joseph Verco, after explaining the advantages of the survey and the clinics, said that the movement had already been, and surely no one could question the desirability of action on a large scale. The committee had accordingly presented the sub-committee with a resolution on the subject.

The meeting was adjourned, and the committee was asked to report at the next meeting.

The Positive Emphasized.
