THE GROWTH OF MUSIC.
LECTURE BY PROFESSOR DAVIES.

The first of a series of three lecture extons on 'The Structure and Growth of Music' was delivered by Professor Davies, Regius Professor of Music and Honorary Fellow of all the English and Welsh Colleges at the University of Oxford, at the opening of the new season of the University Musical Society at the Concert Hall, on Thursday evening, January 19th.

Professor Davies, who is a former President of the University Musical Society, opened his lecture with a brief description of the early history of music and its development from the earliest times. He then went on to discuss the development of music in the Middle Ages, emphasizing the role of the Church in the preservation and transmission of music. He pointed out the significance of the motet and the cantus firmus as examples of musical innovation during this period.

The lecture then continued to focus on the development of music in the Renaissance, with a particular emphasis on the work of composers such as Palestrina and Lassus. Professor Davies highlighted the importance of the madrigal and the consort as cultural forms during this period.

The concluding part of the lecture examined the development of music in the Baroque period, with a focus on the work of composers such as Bach and Handel. Professor Davies discussed the evolution of the concerto and the orchestra during this time, and the role of the harpsichord and the organ in the development of the keyboard tradition.

The lecture ended with a brief overview of the development of music in the Classical and Romantic periods, emphasizing the importance of the violin and the piano as central instruments. Professor Davies concluded his lecture by emphasizing the significance of the organ and the orchestra in the development of music and its role in shaping our understanding of the music of the past.

The lecture was well received by the audience, with many expressing their appreciation for the profundity and clarity of Professor Davies' analysis. The lecture series, which will continue over the next two weeks, is expected to attract a wide audience of music lovers and scholars alike.

The English Language Association to promote its recognition formed.

The move to promote the recognition of the English language in the Commonwealth was announced by the President of the Association, Mr. J. W. Mackenzie, at a meeting held in the British Library on Thursday evening, July 3rd. The Association was established to promote the recognition of the English language as an essential element in the education of all members of the Commonwealth.

The President emphasized the importance of language as a means of communication, and the need for all members of the Commonwealth to have access to a high-quality education in English. He appealed to the government to support the Association's efforts and to recognize the English language as an essential element in the education of all members of the Commonwealth.

Lord T. B. and Lady Forster, the State Governor, and Dame Marguerite Davidson, the Minister for Education, were among those present at the meeting. They voiced their support for the Association's efforts and praised its members for their dedication to promoting the recognition of the English language.

The Association's first task will be to establish a network of members throughout the Commonwealth, with the aim of promoting the recognition of the English language in schools and universities. The Association will also work to ensure that all members of the Commonwealth have access to high-quality English language education.

The Association's activities will include the organization of conferences, seminars, and workshops on the recognition of the English language. It will also work to sensitize the public to the importance of recognizing the English language as an essential element in the education of all members of the Commonwealth.

The Association's work is expected to have a significant impact on the education of all members of the Commonwealth. It will provide a platform for the recognition of the English language and will help to ensure that all members of the Commonwealth have access to high-quality English language education.

The English Language Association is expected to be a valuable addition to the Commonwealth's efforts to promote the recognition of the English language. Its members will play a vital role in ensuring that all members of the Commonwealth have access to high-quality English language education.
