ADELAIDE: THURSDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1919.

THE BEGINNINGS OF LIFE.

Commencement Day was observed with great ceremony by the Adelaide University on Wednesday, December 18th, 1919. The occasion was marked by the delivery of an address by one of the professors dealing with a subject on which he could speak with special right and knowledge. Certainly no one would dispute this claim in the case of the paper read by Professor P. J. Wood Jones, who was well-known as an exponent of scientific and moral science in Great Britain before his retirement from the Adelaide University. His address was given in the presence of the students, and it is to be hoped that it will be published in full in the University Register.

Further Developments.

It is to be hoped that the students will have the opportunity to study these topics in greater detail, as they are essential to a thorough understanding of the subject. The students will also be able to study the latest developments in the field, which will be of great importance in the future.

The University and Urrbrae Agricultural Research Institute.

Professor of Agriculture Proposed.

The University of Adelaide is giving serious consideration to the question of applying the principles of Mr. Peter Wait to the pasture for which they were intended.

At the University commencement yesterday the Chancellor (Sir George Murray) spoke on the matter of the proposal that the University should become the owner of the pasture for which Mr. Wait's principles were intended. The best mode of applying his principles to the pasture was discussed, and it was suggested that the University could take charge of the pasture and use its resources to promote the scientific study of the subject. The Chancellor expressed the hope that the proposal would receive the support of the students and that it would be carried out in the best interests of the University.

THE UNIVERSITY REGISTRAR.

Mr. Hodge Retires.

Mr. Hodge, who has been associated with the University for many years, has retired from his position as Registrar. The University has been fortunate in having such an able and experienced officer for so many years, and it is to be hoped that the University will be able to find a successor who will be equally efficient and will be able to carry on the work with the same success.

A. STALE, TRUSTWORTHY, AND...

In his address at the University Commencement yesterday, the Chancellor (Sir George Murray) spoke of the importance of the pastures and the need for their proper management. He mentioned that the pastures were a valuable resource for the University, and that they should be managed in a way that would ensure their continued existence.

The Chancellor expressed the hope that the proposal would receive the support of the students and that it would be carried out in the best interests of the University.
