MODERN ANATOMY.

University Commemoration Address.

The views of Professor Wood-Jones.

The address at the annual commemoration of the Adelaide University on Wednesday was delivered by Professor F. Wood-Jones, who took as his subject the principles of anatomy in the modern medical curriculum, and the conception of anatomy in the modern world.

The interest which the address attracted was evidenced by the large attendance at the lecture room and the platform, and the applause which followed the delivery of the address.

Professor Wood-Jones stated that the address would be long and abstract on scholarship, and that it would be of little interest to the general public, but that it would be of great interest to students, and that it would be of great value to those who are interested in the study of anatomy.

The address was delivered in the lecture room of the University, and was attended by a large number of students and other interested persons.

NEW GRADUATES.

Welcome by University Association.

Before the commemoration ceremony at the Adelaide University on Wednesday afternoon, the officers of the Graduates' Association of the University tendered a luncheon to the graduates who had been graduated during the year, and who were eligible for the association.

The luncheon was held in the Botanic Park. Several tables had been set up in the shade of the trees, and the environment gave an enjoyable tone to the occasion. All the graduates who were eligible for the association were invited to attend the luncheon, and all were present.

The luncheon was attended by the graduates who had been graduated during the year, and who were eligible for the association. The graduates who were present included those who had graduated in the years 1922 and 1923.
