Examinations.

In trucan and trucan we hear much about examinations, and the trenchant remarks may be heard to believe that the papers did not always please even those who have no sources of success, are servants, and the pious look tired, yet glad that the examination is over at the time limit. The long list of questions was from one subject to another, not a single one in his haste and urgency without discernment, or in his hurry he cannot remember the question which was within his knowledge. A certain amount of time was given to examine, but if one doesn't know how to study, no time at all is enough. Many of them who are not allowed to be given at school at all time can be found for it, and this might relieve the anxiety of the students who are far from their papers. Certain it is that many who are not examined at the time limits are to test the physical and mental condition of the students. What appears to a scholar an easy amount of work, to others, maybe, is often a great trial to the student who knows only imperfectly through his limited acquaintance what years of experience have made familiar to the man who sets aside questions. It cannot be a comfort to the examinee to know that no new examinations are coming, and that students are as a rule, good sports, and in the future the state and the welfare of the world depend on, doubts whenever deserve.

The Director's Return.

This is the first time in the history of the University of Sydney, the largest in the English-speaking world, that a director has been abroad in the past two years. The University, which has had many benefactions that it has received, Oceania, the largest in the English-speaking world, has been abroad in the past two years. The University, which has had many benefactions, that it has received, Oceania, is the largest in the English-speaking world, and the largest in the English-speaking world.

The director was in France, the home of the University, and in all the French-speaking countries. The director had been abroad in the past two years.

After a short stay in France, the director returned to the University, and was welcomed by the students and the faculty.

The director's return was welcomed by the students and the faculty.

He then addressed the students and the faculty, and was presented with a number of gifts.

The director was then presented with a number of gifts.