The Training of Teachers.

In every country visited by the importance of a sufficient number of qualified teachers is great. This is particularly true of rural districts where the character of the teacher's training is the same as at all cases existing in other parts of the country. The professional courses in the rural schools, however, must be more extensive than those in the urban schools, and thus the training of the teachers is more difficult.

An excellent example of the government's care for the training of teachers is the State Normal College in Georgia. This college has an excellent reputation, and the students who graduate from it are well prepared for the work of teaching. The college has a course of instruction of four years, during which the students are required to take 240 hours of instruction in all subjects. In addition to the regular courses, the students are required to do two years of practical teaching in the schools of the state. This training is considered to be of great importance, as it enables the students to become familiar with the methods of teaching and to develop their own teaching abilities.

Recommending organizations.

The schools of the state are also recommended by the various organizations that exist in the country. These organizations are devoted to the improvement of education and are supported by the government and by the people of the state. They conduct investigations and publish reports that are of great value to the schools and to the teachers. The reports of these organizations are considered to be of great importance, as they provide valuable information about the work of the schools and the needs of the teachers.

Blade Reading in Schools.

On the whole, reading in schools has been made compulsory by the government, and the schools have made great progress in this direction. The government has issued regulations that require the schools to conduct reading exercises for 30 minutes each day. These exercises are conducted under the supervision of qualified teachers, and the students are required to read aloud and to answer questions on the material that they have read. The schools are also required to conduct reading exercises during the recesses and after school hours, and the students are required to read books that are recommended by the government.

The Agricultural School.

An Agricultural School has been established in the state, and the students are required to attend it for two years. The school is conducted in the village of New Hope, and the students are required to live and work on the farm. The school is conducted under the supervision of a qualified teacher, and the students are required to attend classes and to conduct practical exercises on the farm. The school is considered to be of great importance, as it provides the students with a practical knowledge of agriculture, which is essential for the success of any farmer.
