The True Artist.

The true artist is neither a painter nor a sculptor, though he may be either or both. The true artist is a man who can see, feel, and express in words, pictures, and music, the beauty, the power, and the passion of life. Art exists to express the emotions of man.

Great thanks were profusely tendered by the donors of the painting of St. Peter, presented to the University of Adelaide, which was hung in the old University Great Hall last week. The painting was given by Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Miller in memory of their son, who died in the First World War.

The New Memorial.

Perhaps at no time is the history of Adelaide more clearly in evidence than at the present. Only a few weeks ago the Great War—vital in its impact upon the Government House grounds, applications, which close on September 30, have been granted for a Civilian Memorial to the dead of South Australian men and women who fell in the Great War. The Memorial will be erected by a committee of members of the South Australian War Memorial Committee. Applications to date are for a site on the property of the Memorial Association at Edward Place, and for a memorial to be erected in the South Australian War Memorial, located in the grounds of the University of Adelaide. The application for the site is due on September 30, and if granted, several will be received from Great Britain largely owing to the efforts of W. H. L. Morse, who has taken a great interest in the matter. Oliver W. Atkinson, Chairman of the committee. Another application for a memorial is to be made by the South Australian War Memorial Association, which has already purchased property on the site where the memorial is to take. The committee has a strong public support when the memorial is to be erected.

Can the Influence of Great Art be Permanently?

The influence of great art is not to be accounted for by the number of works of art that are produced, but by the number of minds that are affected by them. The true artist is the man who can see, feel, and express the beauty, power, and passion of life in his work.

The Health Conference.

Although the Health Association of Australia, the annual inter-State conference of the medical profession, was held in Adelaide this week, the conference was not without its problems. The conference was held to discuss the state of health in the country and to determine what steps should be taken to improve it.

The University Great Hall was crowded with delegates from all parts of the Commonwealth. The meeting opened with a speech by the Governor of South Australia, Sir William Robey, who said that the most important problem facing the medical profession was the education of the public in matters of health.

The University of Adelaide will shortly be ereceted and opened on North Terrace. The University Great Hall was opened by the Governor of South Australia, Sir William Robey, who said that the university was to be the focal point of the education of the people of South Australia.

The conference was opened with a speech by the Governor of South Australia, Sir William Robey, who said that the most important problem facing the medical profession was the education of the public in matters of health.

The conference was opened with a speech by the Governor of South Australia, Sir William Robey, who said that the most important problem facing the medical profession was the education of the public in matters of health.

The conference was opened with a speech by the Governor of South Australia, Sir William Robey, who said that the most important problem facing the medical profession was the education of the public in matters of health.

The conference was opened with a speech by the Governor of South Australia, Sir William Robey, who said that the most important problem facing the medical profession was the education of the public in matters of health.

The conference was opened with a speech by the Governor of South Australia, Sir William Robey, who said that the most important problem facing the medical profession was the education of the public in matters of health.

The conference was opened with a speech by the Governor of South Australia, Sir William Robey, who said that the most important problem facing the medical profession was the education of the public in matters of health.