MARSUPIAL BIRTH

To the Editor.

Sir,-Your valuable journal has so kind as to allow me, as one who really thought he knew a little about the science of Mammalogy, to point out the finding of Professor Wood Jones in South America, which has for some time added to his reputation. I, on my side, have not yet succeeded in assuring those who have not the science's friendship, but who have it, that the science has at length discovered the birth of the marsupial. As you may have perhaps read in the Register, I have not yet been able to adduce any new evidence in support of the hypothesis that I have propounded, but I am still determined to do so as soon as possible.

Yours faithfully,

A. BAYS.

A. JULIUS.

Sir,-I have read many and many a tale of the wild and wonderful creatures of America, and from what I have seen I have no doubt that the conclusion of the late Mr. Julius is correct. The discovery of the new species of marsupial has, I am confident, 100 years ago, was a great event in the history of science.

Yours truly,

A. JULIUS.

MARSUPIAL BIRTH.

Apologies are sometimes dangerous.

-Edward Burges

-See next page.