MIND AND BODY.

THE NATURE OF PERSONALITY.

That the problem of the relation between mind and body has preoccupied the minds of the greatest thinkers of all ages is, perhaps, best illustrated by the fact that the distinction between the two is the foundation of all philosophy. And yet, when we look at the works of these great men, it appears as if they had never thought about the question at all. This is because they were so engrossed in their own subject that they failed to perceive the essential nature of personality.

When we ask what is the source of these works and who is their author, we find that they are all the result of a single consciousness. The mind and body are nothing but the product of the same process. The mind is the product of the body; the body is the product of the mind. This is the essence of personality.

It is important to realize that personality is not just a collection of thoughts and actions, but a unified whole that is greater than the sum of its parts. The mind and body are inseparable; they are two aspects of the same thing.

In conclusion, personality is the essence of life itself. It is the foundation of all human activity and the key to understanding the nature of the universe.
